CHOOSING BOOKS FOR TWO-YEAR-OLDS

The more often you read to your 24-36 month old child, the more likely he is to develop into a lover of books and reading. Toddlers grow into children who love to read when they experience the security and pleasure of cuddling with parents and listening to books, songs and rhymes. So continue to read, read, read to your toddlers and let them see you reading. As you know, young children model adult behavior.

Children 24-36 months old still love books with simple, uncluttered pictures, but can handle more detail than 12-24 month olds. Indeed, some children at this age may pour over the details in some pictures, pointing out to you the interesting things they find. Toddlers enjoy books about familiar situations and experiences such as family life, playing with friends, traveling by different modes of transportation, and animals. Some children this age may begin to show an interest in basic concepts such as colors, shapes, ABCs, and counting.

TIPS FOR READING TO TWO-YEAR-OLDS

Continue to:

- Read and sing to your toddler on a daily basis, using an enthusiastic voice; and make sure your child sees you reading! Make it an enjoyable, unforced, experience by choosing a time when your child seems willing and able to sit and listen. Snuggle and have fun together, laughing over the stories and the silly sounds found in many early childhood books
- Make books readily available to your child so that he can pick them up and browse on his own.

Begin to further involve your child in the reading process:

- Allow him to select some of the books you read. DO read his favorites over and over again. (Children feel comfortable with a book they know well and love to predict what is going to happen.) Also, be sure to introduce new titles.
- Encourage your child to talk about the pictures in the book: "What is that cow doing?" "Do you know what we call that machine?" Also, ask him to find certain objects in an illustration or to name certain objects.
- When a phrase or rhyme is repeated often in the story, have your child say the phrase or rhyme with you. This is a good pre-reading skill.
- Occasionally run your finger under the words as you are reading them. Children will then begin to connect the spoken words with the printed letters on the page.
