CHOOSING BOOKS FOR THREE-YEAR-OLDS

Three year olds are ready to hear books that have simple, straightforward plots—a problem is described, and then the problem is solved. They still enjoy stories about everyday experiences such as getting dressed, going to the zoo, bedtime, etc. (You might call these “here and now” stories.) Threes are also able to appreciate silliness and humor in stories, though generally they are not able to differentiate between reality and fantasy. They may enjoy simple nonfiction books on topics of interest to them such as dinosaurs, trains or ballerinas.

TIPS FOR READING TO THREE-YEAR-OLDS

- Continue to:
- Read to your child on a daily basis, using an enthusiastic and lively voice. Make it a time to snuggle and laugh together. Be sure your child sees you reading; children model adult behavior.
 - Make books readily available to your child so that he can pick them up and browse on his own.
 - Allow him to select some of the books you read and do read his favorites over and over and over.
 - Encourage your child to talk about the pictures in the book and the story itself. Ask him questions about an illustration or about the story.
 - When a phrase or rhyme is repeated often in the book, have your child say the phrase or rhyme with you. This is a good pre-reading activity.
- Further increase the interactive reading experience between you and your child:
- Look at the cover of the book and ask your child what she thinks the story is about. (Some books also have interesting “endpapers” on the reverse of the cover. Be sure to look at those because they frequently add to the story.)
 - Encourage your child to talk about the story while you are reading it by asking her questions: “What do you think will happen next?” “What is the dog doing?” Around the age of 3 begin to repeat their answer and then expand upon it. For example, your child might say, “The dog jumped in the puddle” and you would say, “Yes, the dog jumped in the puddle and he is going to be very wet.” This encourages your child to think and talk more in depth about what is happening in the story.
 - If you’ve read the same book several times, have your child tell the story to you, using the book and turning the pages as she goes along.
 - At the end of the day ask your child to tell you the “story” of her visit to a friend’s house or the “story” of her day. Children will learn they can be storytellers too.
 - Have her run her finger underneath the words in the repeated phrase or rhyme as you say it.
