RAISING A READER

Many parents and caregivers wonder how they can foster a love for reading and books in their very young children. The answer may be easier than you think: start reading to your baby early and do it often, and let them see you reading! According to the Public Library Association, “Research has found that parents who start sharing books with their babies early on have children with better language skills. In addition, children whose parents begin sharing books with them early in life develop a greater interest in and enjoyment of books.”

Listening to stories, looking at colorful, uncluttered illustrations, and holding and handling books provides babies with stimulation needed for brain development in the areas of language and pre-reading skills.

Hearing a loving voice reading and talking to them while they are being cuddled securely is one of the most enjoyable experiences a very young child can have. Children can enjoy the rhyme and rhythm of language long before they can understand the words being read. Remember, your voice is the most wonderful sound in the world to your baby!

CHOOSING BOOKS FOR 12-24 MONTH OLDS

One year olds like little books they can hold easily, such as board books that will withstand rough handling. Larger picture books work well for lap reading. Children this age enjoy books about babies, especially those with pictures of children their own age. Illustrations should be uncluttered and colorful. They like stories that feature rhyming words and repetitive phrases or situations. One year olds also enjoy pointing at objects in the pictures and naming them. They also continue to enjoy nursery rhymes, action rhymes and fingerplays.

ENCOURAGING ONE-YEAR-OLDS TO LOVE BOOKS

- Talk to your baby! Sing to her! Read to her daily! Talk about what you are doing: “Now we’re putting on your socks, oh, and now your shoes. Lets tie them up—1,2,3!” Sing songs you know or make up ones about your activities: “Now it’s time to ride in the car, ride in the car.”
- Use an animated, enthusiastic voice when reading to your child. Make the funny sounds the animals or vehicles make; then laugh together! Book-sharing time should be a time to snuggle together and have fun.
- Involve your child in the reading activity. Allow your child to choose some of the books he would like to hear and to turn the pages. (Also choose books that you like—your child can tell if you dislike what you’re reading.) Ask your child simple questions about the pictures and the story.
- Establish a routine time and place for reading together. This might be after lunch, before naps, or every evening before bed.
- Don’t make the sharing time too long. As you know, children this age have short attention spans.

In his book The Read-Aloud Handbook, Jim Trelease encourages parents to surround their toddlers with easy access to books. He writes, “Place board books in the high chair, the playpen, and the crib. Let your child see books as least as often as he sees toys and television.” Isn’t that a wonderful thought!
